Investment Summary

- The gap between the AB-ICI and RTS index remained wide during 2017, narrowing slightly only in December due to seasonal factors
- High oil prices triggered upward revisions to economic growth forecasts and boosted market sentiment
- Weak 4Q17 macro statistics placed ceiling on Russian growth, but the market ignored that, especially after “Kremlin list” publication

AB-ICI – temporary growth without fundamental improvements

AB-ICI mainly flat in 2017, interrupted by seasonal growth in December

Economic confidence pressured by capital outflows and slow retail deposit de-dollarization

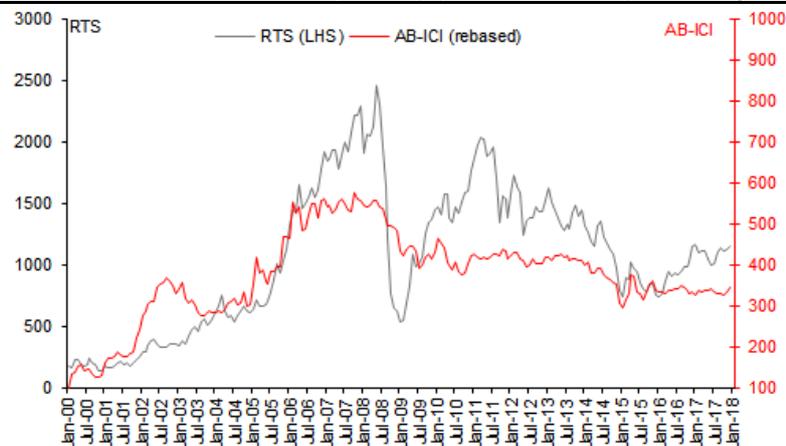

High oil prices boosted market confidence, while the threat of sanctions restricted it

Despite a recovery towards the end of the year, the share of foreign banks is still below the 2016 level

The gap between the AB-ICI and RTS indexes remained wide during 2017, the AB-ICI mainly flat while the RTS strengthened driven by positive market sentiment. The AB-ICI increased by 3.0% m/m in December due to seasonality; however, we still see no improvement in fundamentals:

- Economic confidence strengthened at the end of 2017 due to a seasonal pick-up in retail deposit growth (+3.6% m/m in December, vs. 2.2% m/m in December 2016, and 8.3% m/m in December 2015). However, in general fundamental factors played against a recovery: Russian macro statistics are weak, net capital outflows accelerated y/y ($31.3 bn in 2017 vs. $19.8 bn in 2016), the level of retail deposit dollarization remains above the pre-crisis level (20.6% in 2017 vs. 17-18% in 2011-13).
- Market confidence was quite unstable during the year. On one hand, high real interest rates and a strong oil prices (recently surpassing $70/bbl – the highest since 2014) played in favor of it. While on the other, the threat of sanctions tightening placed a ceiling on market confidence. Despite a seasonal bond placement acceleration near the end of the year (52 in December 2017 vs. an average of 20 during the year) the number of issuances by Russian companies remained in line with 2016, when 263 bonds were placed (vs. 252 in 2017).
- Foreign confidence was under pressure in 2017. Although the share of foreign banks in Russia recovered near end-2017 to 7.5%, it still remains lower than end-2016. We attribute the year-end recovery partly to statistical factors as a result of the CBR’s cleanup of the banking sector in 2017. The CBR revoked the licenses of 58 banks and put three large private banks (Otkritie, B&N Bank and Promsvyazbank) under the management of the Fund of Banking Sector Consolidation.

AB-ICI: Positive sentiment fuels the market

High oil prices boosted both economic growth forecasts and market sentiment

Market is under euphoria about Russia after “Kremlin list” publication; however, we do not share such view

Our cautious view is underscored by the weak 4Q17 macros statistics and the cloudy outlook for 2018

We downgraded GDP forecast to 1.0% in 2018; the gap between AB-ICI and RTS will remain wide

High oil prices ($65-70/bbl in November-December 2017 and January 2018 vs. $53/bbl in 10M17) have resulted in upward revisions to Russia economic forecasts by the World Bank and the IMF, which revised up their Russian GDP growth forecast to 1.7% y/y in 2018 (from 1.6% y/y earlier). The RTS advanced by 10% during December supported by the improvement in market sentiment, which was also boosted by high oil prices.

The RTS index is now enjoying a relief rally after the publication of the recent US CAATSA report – the so-called “Kremlin list” – a list of 210 names (114 state officials and 96 businessmen), that looks like a copy-and-paste of last year’s Forbes list. While it was initially expected to become a roadmap for future sanctions, it has now served only to arouse market surprise and show that the US is unwilling to exert systematic pressure on Russia’s elites. However, we believe the report should be treated with a bit more cautious, as it has already caused a stir. Firstly, in US a scandal has flared-up that may stoke geopolitical tensions: according to Anders Aslund, an Atlantic Council expert, the original report was thrown out at the last minute and replaced with what amounts to a hasty copy-and-paste of the Russian government website and last year’s Russian Forbes magazine. Secondly, uncertainty significantly increased after publication of the report, as (a) still there was no information on the sovereign debt report and (b) US President Trump unexpectedly decided not to impose sanctions on companies involved in major transactions with the Russian defense sector, which, however, is technically illegal, because this was not agreed with Congress. Thirdly, the US Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin stated that additional sanctions against Russia will be imposed; however, the market has no idea what form this may take.

Our concerns is that the market is now overly optimistic, ignoring the extremely disappointing macro statistics on Russia. Firstly, 4Q economic growth in Russia decelerated to 1.2% y/y and reached only 1.5% y/y for 2017, implying that November’s economic growth deceleration (-0.3% y/y according to Economy Ministry data) was not an anomaly, but a signal of economic weakness. We warned about this earlier, when two sectors which are indicators of future growth dynamics demonstrated a contraction in 3Q17 (manufacturing by 0.1% y/y and construction by 0.7% y/y). Secondly, the 2018 economic growth outlook is cloudy. (A) State projects (the Kerch Bridge and the Power of Siberia), which provided nearly 90% of investment growth in 2017, are nearing completion. (B) The industrial production outlook has also been dampened by proposals of production shutdowns in 11 of Russia’s regions to facilitate security and safety control during the World Cup. (C) Tight budget policy (just 1% y/y growth in expenditures) and the Finance Ministry’s desire to save additional oil revenues from high oil prices will limit consumption growth this year. Moreover, uncertainty surrounding the cabinet’s tax initiatives in relation to personal tax will also cap consumption growth. The OPEC agreement also puts a ceiling on Russia’s windfall from high oil prices, which is why we are concerned about the oil price as the main driver of growth in the Russian economy.

Given the aforementioned factors and the fact that the economic growth acceleration in Russia was quite short-lived in 2017, we have downgraded our GDP growth forecast for this year to 1.0% y/y (vs. the 1.5% y/y initially expected). We believe that the gap between the AB-ICI and RTS indexes will remain wide this year, as the end-2017 AB-ICI index growth acceleration was temporary due to seasonal factors, while we do not see any improvements in the fundamental factors that may narrow the gap. In the short-term, the RTS index will benefit from strong oil prices, however there is a risk of market sentiment deteriorating.

RATING DEFINITIONS

Alfa Bank applies a three-tier rating system for stocks under coverage. These ratings are based on the expected total stock return, which is the sum of the return to the target price and the expected dividend yield.

The ratings are:

Overweight (O/W):	Expected total stock return > 15%
Equal Weight (E/W):	Expected total stock return < 15% and > 0%
Underweight (U/W):	Expected total stock return < 0%

Owing to price volatility and our policy of not changing our ratings in response to frequent, short-term misalignments with expected returns, our ratings may sometimes not conform with the ranges indicated above.

In addition to the ratings above, we may occasionally assign the following classifications to stocks covered:

Restricted (R):	A rating, target price or financial forecasts are not disclosed owing to compliance or other regulatory considerations.
Under Review (U/R):	In response to recent or pending news flow requiring a significant overhaul or amendment of a company's financial model, the previous rating and/or target price is temporarily not disclosed.
Coverage in Transition (I/T)	Due to changes in the research team, the disclosure of a stock's rating and/or any other stock-specific information is temporarily suspended. The stock stays in Alfa Bank's coverage universe and usual disclosures will be resumed in due course.
Not Rated (N/R)	The stock is not in Alfa Bank's coverage universe at the time the research product referring to it is published.

Target Prices

The Target Price reflects the research analyst's informed opinion on the price which is likely to be attained by the stock within 12 months, subsequent to the date of the Target Price determination.
